made possible a plan of illumination at San Francisco undreamed of ata St. Louis, ten years ago. Thomas A. Edison said that it marked a new development which he would describe as art lighting. Theodore Roosevelt said the illumination was "the most wonderful in history and the greatest glory of the Exposition."

The indirect system of lighting prevailed throughout. The grounds were treated as if in reality they were a huge stage and the trees, the shrubbery and the palaces mere bits of painted scenery. Lights illuminated the buildings were shielded by transparent banners, decorated, with Spanish colors and designs, which reflected the glow against the palace walls and facades, and brought out the detail in soft relief to the great satisfaction of the sculptor, the artist and the architect and to the visitor. Upon the principal pieces of statuary, domes and minarets, searchlights, all hidden from the direct view of the visitor, pointed their rays.

Colored lighting was derived chiefly from two sources; from giant search lights before which were placed at different times screens of various tones of color and from the incandescent lights concealed in the receses of the columns and reflecting light upon nearby walls.

Unusual pyrotechnic effects by the use of searchlights were attained. Luminous shafts of light were used to picture Scotch plaids in the air. "The birth of color," a "ghost dance," the "flying serpent," the "spooks' pa-rade" and other spectacular effects

BOILER EXPLODES, FACTORY PANIC AT WEYMOUTH

One Killed and Forty Injured--Employes of Shoe Factory Leap from Windows.

WEYMOUTH, Mass., Oct. 11-An exploding boiler in the engine house adjoining the shoe factory of Strong and Garfield, killed the engineer and threw the crowded factory into a panic. Several men leaped from windows carrying the glass and sashes of the windows with them. Others were hurt in the rush for the stairs.

Two hundred employes were at work when the explosion occurred. First reports were that the explosion was due to a bomb. Fifty persons reported injured. Just what caused the explosion is uncertain.

Much Damage Results. The explosion blew out the side of the engine room, carrying Engineer Condrick, pieces of the boiler and viles of brick with it. Fire im-mediately started, but was extinguished before it had gained a foothold on the wooden factory build-

On its way to the fire, the motor combination from North Weymouth skidded into a tree, wrecking the truck and seriously if not fatally in-juring the driver.
